

ABSTRACT

A baluster includes a proximal section that is mounted on a stair of a staircase and a distal section that is fastened to a railing associated with the staircase. The distal section includes a bore which snugly and releasably accommodates a central section of the baluster so the central section can be moved with respect to the distal section whereby the baluster can be easily accommodated between the stair and the railing.